RADICAL CHANGES IN BATTLE FRONT

In German East Africa Where the British Push the Enemy Back.

(SPECIAL TO THE TELEGRAM)

WASHINGTON, August 19.—"During the last month the battle front in German East Africa has changed more radically than in any other theater of the world war. The British troops have been pushing the German colonial and native troops southward over an extent of territory which it carried forward in the same degree eastward from Verdun would bring the allies to within 100 miles of Berlin. If the Italians were to advance as far north from the Isonzo front as British troops have advanced southward from Muanza on Lake Victoria Nyanza, Vienna would be in the hands of General Cardona. If the Russians could have effected such a western drive during the same period they would have been in possession of Warsaw, Cracow, Danzig and Königsberg today. But such comparisons only can the reader of daily war despatches realize the extent of the territory over which the European forces in East Africa are fighting," according to the war geography bulletin issued today by the National Geographic Society in Washington.

"In the latter part of July General Smuts, commanding the British troops, was reported to be attacking German forces along a line extending from the port of Tanga, opposite the island of Pemba, to Korogwe, some fifty miles inland on the rail road line extending into the Usambara province. Another British force was operating around Muanza. By the middle of August the British forces had reached Kilimantindo, an important town on the German Central railway, running from the seaport, Dar-es-Salaam, capital of German East Africa, to Ujiji, on the eastern shore of Lake Tanganyika, 700 miles distant. It is nearly 300 miles in an air line from Kilimantindo to Tanga and almost as far to Muanza. The advance along the coast has been for a distance of eighty miles, from Tanga to Sadani, a seaport of lesser importance situated almost due west of that name.

"In their advance toward Sadani from Tanga the British captured the important port of Pangani, at the mouth of the Pangani river. Next in line on the southern line along the coast is the town of Bagamoyo, having a population of 18,000, many of whom are British Indians. Bagamoyo occupies an honored place in the annals of East Africa because it was the starting point for the expeditions of exploration headed by such famous travelers and scientists as Burton, Stanley, Speke and Grant.

"To the west of Kilimantindo, on the German Central railway, is the native town of Tabara with a population of 40,000. This place seems destined to become the most important commercial center of the interior for in addition to its present railway connection with the coast and the Tanyanyika country, it is on the caravan route and proposed railway line to the Victoria Nyanza territory, while another railroad is to tap the region to the south, extending into Rhodesia and Portuguese East Africa. Furthermore, it is the chief town of the Wanyanwezi natives, who as a whole are peaceful agriculturists, inhabiting the richly wooded plateau lying between the two great rift-valleys of East Africa. These people were mentioned by the Portuguese as far back as the sixteenth century when the country was known as 'the land of the moon.' The Wanyanwezi are Bantu negroes whose distinctive features are long noses and curly rather than woolly hair. Among their peculiar methods of personal adornment are tattooing, the filing of the upper incisor teeth and the wearing of arm and leg bands with brass wire rings. The men of the tribe watch the poultry and the flocks, while the women do the hard manual work. Instead of watch dogs they keep bee-hives in their huts, and the insects prove a most effective defense against intruders as well as a source of food."

MOLFETTA SEAPORT IS POINT OF INTEREST

Just Now Especially on Account of Recent Shelling by Austrian Torpedo Boats.

(SPECIAL TO THE TELEGRAM)

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19.—Molfetta, the seaport of Italy which was shelled by Austrian torpedo boats recently, is the subject of the following war geography bulletin issued by the National Geographic Society from its Washington headquarters:

"The shipbuilding yards of Molfetta were probably the chief targets of the Austrian navy during the recent bombardment. While the town presents a striking appearance from the sea, its walls, studded with towers, are of a former age when such defenses were ineffective against pillaging expeditions of freebooters and adventurers.

"With a population of more than 40,000, Molfetta is one of the thriving commercial centers of the southeastern coast of Italy. In addition to its trade as a seaport the city has numerous manufacturing establishments, producing flour, soaps, wines, bricks and vermicelli. Sixteen miles by rail to the southeast is the important town of Bari (the Barium of the ancients). "Evidences of a neolithic settlement have been found in the vicinity of Molfetta, but the origin of the present town is uncertain. It began to figure

Just the Thing for Diarrhoea.

"About two years ago I had a severe attack of diarrhoea which lasted over a week," writes W. C. Jones, Buford, N. D. "I became so weak that I could not stand upright. Many druggists recommend this remedy because they know that it is reliable. Obtainable everywhere.—Advertisement in European history during the sixteenth century when Charles V. bestowed it upon the Duke of Tormo. No sooner had it passed into the possession of its new master than the ill-starred marshal of France, Odet de Foix Lautrec, descended upon it and sacked it in the prosecution of his campaign against the kingdom of Naples. Lautrec, though a gallant soldier, owed his advancement in the service of the French king, Francis I, not to his prowess in arms but to the fact that the charms of his sister, Françoise de Chateaubriant, had fascinated his sovereign. He died in Italy a victim of the plague which decimated his army shortly after the sacking of Molfetta.

Picturesque Building.

"Molfetta was one of the cities of southern Italy in which serious disturbances occurred in May 1898, when there was a sudden increase in the price of bread.

"The most picturesque building in the medieval section of Molfetta is the cathedral, which like the cathedral in the neighboring Bari, has the feature of two towers, both attached to the east end. These campaniles are of plain masonry, the stories being suggested by blind arches and windows.

"The Austrian province of Herzegovina is directly across the Adriatic from Molfetta, a distance of 125 miles."

J. H. (Cyclone) Davis.

Alleging that Paul Waples, chairman of the state Democratic executive committee, willfully omitted to place his name on the printed ballots as Cyclone Davis, and instead placed it there under the name of J. H. Davis, the well-known Texas character, J. H. (Cyclone) Davis has filed suit for the sum of fifty thousand dollars against Waples. Cyclone Davis alleges that few people know him under the name of J. H. Davis, and, further, that the omission cost him over 50,000 votes, enough to allow his opponent the advantage.
